Tension rises after North Philly gunfire

Temple University student, allegedly shot on his stoop during attempted robbery, shoots back ◐ Both teenager, college student wounded ◐ Neighbors second-guess police motives

RICARD LARMA/METRO

▶ A sports utility vehicle with a Temple University sticker on its rear window was parked yesterday just yards from the front stoop where Eells and a teenager allegedly shot each other.

A Temple University student exchanged gunfire early yesterday with an alleged would-be robber while defending himself from a stickup, according to police, and both the student and the would-be robber were hospitalized with gunshot wounds.

Police plan to press charges against the 15-year-old for the incident with the student identified in reports as Robert Eells, 21, of Bucks County.

But neighbors on Eells' North 12th Street block told a different story.

"We've tried to have conversations with them, but these kids were basically on a racial tension thing," said one resident who would only identify herself as Brenda, 50. She said she is block captain of the 2300 block of North 12th Street where the shooting took place.

Other neighbors added that the Temple tenants often hung out late on their stoop smoking and drinking.

VIA FACEBOOK

▶ Eells

"What was he doing sitting out here with a gun at two o'clock in the morning?" said Teandra Wilkins, 31, who heard more gunshots Monday morning than she could count.

Wilkins claims she saw police carry at least six guns out of Eells' house after paramedics carted away his wounded body.

Police say Eells was shot in the abdomen and the 15-year-old was hit in the chest and leg, but neighbors contend the younger boy was shot from behind as he was running away.

"My understanding is that once the boy shot [Eells], he ran off," said Wilkins. "If he was running away, why shoot him more than once in the back? A license to carry doesn't give you the right to shoot people when they are no longer a threat."

Temple police refused comment yesterday, as did a man who answered the door of Eells' apartment.

"We're all just trying to get our stuff together and get out," said the man, who insisted he did not live at the residence.

E-mailed warning

After yesterday's 1:45 a.m. shooting, Temple later in the morning sent out a campuswide e-mail.

- "This is a message from Temple Police with updated information about today's incident:
- A suspect has been arrested in the early morning, off-campus attempted robbery and shooting of a Temple student in the 2300 block of North 12th Street, north of Dauphin Street. Philadelphia police have charged one suspect in the case. Philadelphia and Temple police continue to investigate.
- In addition, the injured student is recovering at Temple University Hospital.
- Please avoid the area as there is increased police activity. Anyone having information regarding this crime should call the Philadelphia Police."

RICARD LARMA/METRO

Temple tension

As Temple University continues to expand, tensions between longtime area residents and students deepen.

"The neighborhood is overpopulated with students and it's starting to affect the community," block captain Brenda said. "I absolutely feel like the police care more about the safety of Temple students than they do about other residents."

She plans to organize a protest against the perceived injustice.

"I've called Temple police more than three or four times in the past few weeks about [Eells'] house," she said. "It's like they heard me, but didn't listen."

"Our neighbors like us and we like our neighbors," responded Temple student Alex, who lives off campus. "But if you live on Dauphin, that's your fault. There are no students there." METRO/AW

"Temple seems like it'll be everywhere. It's never going to end. What's going to happen to my grandkids? Who's going to be there for the youth? They have a right to be here like anybody else. For me, this is home." BRENDA

$100M man gets own radio station

Philly's superstar quarterback Mike Vick has name on new hip-hop channel Now extinct The Beat 100.3 gone Radio One hasn't explained 'Mike Vick Radio'

Coming off a week where Mike Vick signed a $100 million contract, it seemed like things couldn't get much better for him. Or could they?

Last Friday, 107.9 WPHI-FM began broadcasting as "Mike Vick Radio," touting itself as Mike Vick 24/7. The frequency, previously home to WRNB, claims on its website "Mike Vick has taken over the radio station! 107.9 is now Mike Vick Radio and we have no idea what he's going to do. Make sure you tune in to see what he has up his sleeve!"

The station does not have any jockeys, but plays a mix of hip-hop and R&B with some crossover. There are also sound bites of Vick from press conferences, but no direct commentary from No. 7 himself. No one at the station or Radio One, which owns WPHI, could be reached for comment Monday. According to numerous websites, the station is "stunting," using the name as a way to drum up buzz.

▶ Vick

Vick has been a polarizing figure since signing with the Eagles as a backup quarterback in 2009 following 19 months in jail for operating a dogfighting ring. In the last year, he has revived his career, winning NFL Comeback Player of the Year and finishing second in fan voting for the Madden 2012 cover.

Woman murdered inside car

PORT RICHMOND. Police are investigating the fatal shooting of a woman inside a parked car.

Aiesha Holloway, 19, was sitting a white Chevrolet on the 2000 block of E. Atlantic Street when, shortly before 3:15 a.m. yesterday, she was killed by a single gunshot wound to the head.

She was pronounced dead at the scene.

Circumstances are unclear, but witnesses saw a man running from the car shortly after shots were heard.

No arrests have been made. METRO/AW

Strike looms for Catholic teachers?

- Archdiocesen schools scheduled to open tomorrow
- Teachers vote today on contract or potential strike

Today is a big day for thousands of Catholic school students and their families as the Archdiocese of Philadelphia tries to reach a new contract with its teachers' union before classes begin tomorrow.

The Association of Catholic Teachers Local 1776, which represents 736 secondary school lay and religious teachers, is expected to vote on a possible deal or whether to authorize a strike this morning. The outcome would affect 17 archdiocesan high schools and roughly 16,000 students. Elementary schools are not part in the negotiations.

▶ Catholic schools will be opening.

The two sides were expected to work late into the night yesterday following extensive negotiations Saturday and Sunday.

"They are hopeful that they'll have a contract to bring to the members at the general meeting [today]. And then school is scheduled to start on [Wednesday], so they're going to work hard to come to a resolution that works for both parties," teachers union spokeswoman Heather Cummings said.

The archdiocese sent a letter to parents ensuring them that school would start tomorrow, as scheduled. An official could not be reached for comment yesterday. The sides have been negotiating since March on approximately 300 items, many of which included changes to bring Catholic education into the 21st century.

We put our energy into getting everything back to normal.

At PECO, we know how hard it can be when you lose power. As one of the most damaging storms in our history, Hurricane Irene interrupted service for nearly 7,000,000 customers on the East Coast and caused power outages for about 500,000 PECO customers. To get the lights back on, we mobilized an around-the-clock effort of more than 4,000 PECO employees, contractors and workers from utilities as far away as Illinois, Florida, and Indiana.

We'd like to thank everyone who jumped into action during this hurricane, including our local emergency responders, state and local organizations and all of our PECO employees. # US must keep up fight or risk more attacks

- Envoy says there's more work to be done in Afghanistan against Taliban
- Stable country is 'the ultimate guarantee there will not be another 9/11'

JOHANNES EISELE/AFP/GETTY IMAGES

▶ A U.S. ambassador to Kabul says there's more to be done.

The United States must keep fighting the Taliban or risk more attacks like those of Sept. 11, 2001, because the insurgent group is a ruthless enemy that has not cut ties to al Qaeda, the U.S. ambassador to Kabul said.

Ryan Crocker, a career diplomat who was ambassador in Iraq, also warned the United States would have to spend billions more in the coming years to bolster Afghanistan's government and security forces as its own troops prepare to return home.

"What we have to do is I think demonstrate the strategic patience that is necessary to win a long war," he told Reuters, in an interview ahead of the 10th anniversary of the attacks.

"It is going to require more resources, it's going to require time. I hope we can bring all those to bear, because as hard, painful [and] expensive as this has been in blood and treasure, it has cost a lot less than 9/11 did."

Crocker described building a stable Afghanistan as "the ultimate guarantee that there will not be another 9/11."

After nearly a decade of fighting in Afghanistan the Taliban have greater reach than any time since they were ousted from power, and civilian casualties are at the highest since 2001. REUTERS

Mortgage crisis Obama priority

DETRIT. Tackling the housing market's woes is a "high priority" for President Barack Obama, a White House official said yesterday; but the aide would not say whether housing-related measures would be in Obama's jobs speech later this week.

"There is no question that there are far too many working families who are concerned about the challenge of affording their mortgage payment every month," said White House spokesman Josh Earnest. REUTERS

Black ancestry link to allergies

NEW YORK. In a new study of 2-year-olds in Boston, black kids were twice as likely as white kids to have an immune response to foods such as peanuts, milk and eggs — and almost four times as likely to have a "sensitization" to three or more foods.

While food sensitization doesn't necessarily pose any danger on its own, kids who are sensitized to certain foods are more likely to develop full-blown allergies to them in the future. REUTERS

Wet and wetter: Coasts brace for more flooding

The hits keep coming: First Irene, then Lee Extreme weather lingers

Still mopping up after tropical storm Irene, Vermont and other Northeastern states were placed under a flash flood watch yesterday as more rain headed their way.

The National Weather Service issued flash flood watches yesterday afternoon lasting through today for a vast swath of the Northeast, including flooded areas of Vermont and parts of New Hampshire, Maine, Massachusetts and Connecticut down through Pennsylvania, New York and New Jersey.

"This is a potentially dangerous situation" the NWS said in a statement on its website. "Areas hard hit by Tropical Storm Irene last week will be susceptible to more flash flooding given the already wet and eroded ground. It will not take much rainfall to cause flash flooding in this situation." REUTERS

Bush ally a believer, praises 9/11 response

Former Australian prime minister stays the course in his praise of personal friend W.'s handling of 9/11

Critical history

The day before the attacks, on Sept. 10, 2001, Prime Minister John Howard met President George W. Bush for the first time. They spent four hours together, including talks over lunch at the White House, starting what became a strong political alliance and personal friendship.

- "We didn't talk about terrorism," Howard said. "Nobody knew this terrible event was just around the corner."
- On Sept. 11, Howard was in his Washington hotel, only a few blocks from the White House, when the first attack happened.

Australia's former Prime Minister John Howard, a surprise witness to the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks on the United States, believes former President George W. Bush deserves more praise for his response and for stopping further attacks.

In an interview to mark a decade since the attacks, Howard said he has no regrets about joining the war in Afghanistan, cautions against an premature withdrawal of troops, and said history will vindicate Bush's response to the new threats.

"The decisions I believed were right," Howard said. "I still believe they were right, and I believe history will vindicate them."

64%

In Australia, the latest polls show 64 percent believe Australian forces should be withdrawn from the war in Afghanistan, compared with 47 percent 12 months ago. "It would be a big error for the allies to pull out prematurely," Howard said.

The events of Sept. 11 came at the halfway mark of Howard's term as prime minister, and had a profound impact on his next six years in office, propelling national security to the equal top political issue alongside economic management.

The attacks helped cement a close personal and political alliance between Howard and Bush, who named Howard a "man of steel" for his steadfast support of the United States, and fundamentally reshaped the Australia-U.S. military alliance, which had been the bedrock of Australia's security for 50 years. # A week of reflection

Much has been written in the last 10 years about the effect the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, had on the United States and her relationship with the wider world.

This week, Metro devotes much of its editorial pages to examining that and other issues, as we approach the 10th anniversary of the attacks.

Today, we look at the way America and Americans were changed by the shocking trauma of that Tuesday morning.

September 10 of that year was only 24 hours — but it represented a different world.

TONY METCALF, EDITOR IN CHIEF

The New York Times

Headlines from Sept. 10, 2001

A glance at some of the headlines that appeared the day before the attacks:

- It was 12 years since the fall of the Berlin wall.
- 133 days since the disappearance of Chandra Levy

Gallup Poll completed on 9/10 reported 55 percent of Americans were "dissatisfied with the way things are going in the United States."

- Actor Robert Blake was suspected but not yet charged with killing his wife after dinner at his favorite restaurant.

POST-9/11, AMERICA'S GRAND IDEALS ARE TARNISHED

BY
TODD GITLIN

SOCIOLOGIST AND CULTURAL COMMENTATOR, COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY

On Sept. 10, 2001, the United States of America was busy pursuing its differences, as usual. Culture wars flourished. The population was growing more suburban, less white, more foreign-born, more Western and Southern. The ill feeling that followed the appointment of George W. Bush as president of the United States by a 5-4 Supreme Court decision had not dissipated much, if at all. That day, The New York Times editorialized against proposed Bush tax cuts, and Sean Hannity's immigrant-phobic radio show went into national syndication.

The next day, the Bergen Record was saying, "Almost all of our concerns suddenly seemed trivial in the face of this monumental tragedy." And the Topeka Capital Journal editorialized: "Our petty differences, over politics, over race, over the economy, will melt away just as surely as the glass and metal of the World Trade Center."

Well, no. The longing may have been real, and the collective effort on display in the days, weeks, and months after Sept. 11 was often inspiring. But it was hard for an extraordinarily diverse country to agree for long on what America stood for, besides grief, cooperation, and pride. The blazing jet fuel that melted away the pillars of the World Trade Center did not melt away differences, though some officials tried gagging dissenters. President Bush's press secretary, Ari Fleischer, famously chastised a TV comedian that Americans "need to watch what they say, watch what they do." Eighteen months later, on the eve of the Iraq war, the Dixie Chicks, who had both the top-selling album and single at the time, had their songs pulled from play lists when one of them, Natalie Maines, not previously known for her political leanings, said she was "ashamed the president of the United States is from Texas"— ashamed, that is, that he was taking the country to war on the basis of false and cherry-picked information. Angry listeners called stations to denounce her as unpatriotic. Other media muzzled themselves.

For some time, the sudden gasp of impotence produced spasms of would-be omnipotence. By the time America returned to its normal dissension, it was too late to stop a misguided war predicated on a fantasy that joined the feeling of absolute vulnerability to absolute rectitude and absolute paranoia. "They" had it in for us, so we would destroy "them." If a network of fanatical masterminds could strike us anywhere from a shifting faraway base, we would have to be more powerful than the sum of all other forces on the face of the earth—forever.

If on Sept. 10, 2001, America was united in disbelief that anyone could hijack airliners, crash them on these shores, and massacre thousands of human beings in the name of a crazy and vicious ideology, then for some time afterward America toyed with near-unity at the cost of mental self-decapitation.

Quoted

"It was hard for an extraordinarily diverse country to agree for long on what America stood for."

"Americans have resumed a long, slow ebbing of collective confidence in our institutions."

"No gadgets will substitute for the lost dream of an American destiny that would be more than the sum of its parts."

But reality proved resistant to the messianic fantasy of remaking the world at will — whether America's or al-Qaeda's. The tyrant Saddam Hussein was not in cahoots with the Islamist al-Qaeda, and neither was in cahoots with south-of-the-border immigrants, Muslim-Americans, abortion doctors or "uppity" same-sexers — other targets of hatred on the part of those who felt that their country was under assault by aliens.

The unity of Sept. 11, 2001, could not be sustained, and since then, Americans have resumed a long, slow ebbing of collective confidence that our institutions are as capable as each of us wishes we individually were.

We are doubtful about all authorities. Expert opinion is under fire from every direction. None of the branches of government inspire confidence, nor do big business, schools or national media. The Afghanistan and Iraq expeditions have boomeranged; Americans have grown grumpier about foreign expeditions. Americans will tell pollsters they think the country is in decline — though they did so in similar numbers 20 years ago. Whether they trust the polls themselves is doubtful.

As the dust clears, America remains a tangle of clashing values, divergent goals, and not-always-acknowledged doubts. Traditional optimism has worn thin, whether about economic prospects, national standing or moral virtue.

Patently, the country is in a bad mood, not least because it turned out that the forces capable of wrecking workplaces and throwing people out of their homes wore white collars and cufflinks, not turbans. About this, there is much agreement, but no focused course of action follows.

Meanwhile, a vocal minority, with a grip on a major political party, counsels that the most dangerous enemy is the taxpayer-fueled U.S. government—along with its educated, secularist supporters. Amid the general jitters, rumbles of xenophobia resound and demagogic conspiracy theories flourish. Many people assume that somebody must be in charge — a small malevolent group, most likely, for wasn't America born innocent and Americans destined to be a chosen people, and therefore shouldn't our failings be somebody's fault? On the other hand, more Americans are probably bewildered because nobody seems to be writing the script, and alarmists, whether about climate change or economic slump, are met with skeptical glares because they too purport to be experts. We yearn for rescue — as many in 2008 thought Barack Obama would deliver us as we stood by and watched — and in more realistic moods doubt it is possible.

It's fair to say, in summary, that America's quandaries cannot be resolved by rounding up external suspects. Enemies we have, but they are not so lethal or grave as to smother our deeper dissensions. The larger trouble is that our grand ideals are badly tarnished — except perhaps for the hope that faster, more mobile, more reliable round-the-clock communication and other technologies will remedy ignorance, cure disease, extend life, arrange for appropriate dates, and end boredom. But the next app, drone, database, networking platform or banking "product" will not restore America's place as the world's city upon a hill. Confidence in technological gadgetry may remain our abiding faith, but no gadgets will substitute for the lost dream of an American destiny that would be more than the sum of its parts.

FOR ALL THIS, ARE WE ANY SAFER?

Vast changes in security over the last decade have been constantly scrutinized ACLU says government has taken advantage of technology, privacy Security officials say airports safer now than 10 years ago because of training, technology

They're the four words all commuters and travelers have come to know by heart over the last decade.

See something? Say something.

The vigilance campaign has been drilled into the heads of the traveling public, and it's just one of the many security measures that have been enacted since shortly after Sept. 11, 2001.

While security officials and law enforcement attribute those measures to making the traveling public safer, not everyone sees the benefit of every program enacted.

"The executive branch has taken advantage of our technological revolution and … in the atmosphere of continued fear-mongering, Congress has not only failed to curb the executive violations, but has ratified them," said Hina Shamsi, the director of the national security project for the American Civil Liberties Union. "In the 10 years since, the reality is: For all of the resources and our national treasury that has been spent on surveillance, there is no objective evidence that we are safer."

The ACLU has continually scrutinized various programs put in place after the 9/11 attacks.

Most recently it has filed a Freedom of Information lawsuit against the government for what it said is a failure to release documents about the FBI's nationwide system of collecting and sharing reports from local and state agencies about "vague and expansively defined suspicious activity."

It also sued on behalf of U.S. citizens on the "no fly" list, and three years ago lost an attempt to sue against the Bush Administration's warrantless wiretapping program.

For Donald Hafner, a political science professor at Boston College whose teaching field includes national security, the issue goes beyond the question of privacy.

"You used to visit government buildings in Washington or go watch Congress in session … now we have concrete barriers around buildings," Hafner said. "Maybe it is stranger to think of a world in which that didn't exist. The psychological impact on American society is something not to be dismissed."

Self-defense, growing

▶ Fulop

Steve Fulop had just been promoted from an analyst to associate at Goldman Sachs when the 9/11 attacks occurred. A downtown Jersey City resident who commuted every day into Lower Manhattan, he knew he couldn't simply go back to life as usual after Sept. 11th, 2001.

"I looked at the senior people I was working with and felt that there had to be more than just working in finance," said Fulop. "I always felt service was important. … And after being three blocks away from the towers when they fell, I thought it was the right thing to do. So I enlisted in the Marine Corps."

Fulop, now 33, was sent to Iraq. He's now a Councilman in Jersey City, and running for mayor there.

His story is a compelling one, but he is hardly alone.

have proven worthy, Hafner said, others might not be worth their price.

"We are safe, but we are doing a lot of things which are costly and a fair number of things probably which are not justified and have not contributed to our domestic security," Hafner said.

For those in charge of ensuring the safety of travelers, the changes in security over the last 10 years have proved worth it.

Despite the outcries from organizations and the public when body imaging scanners were introduced or other methods were implemented, officials said it's an issue of education.

"Once we educate people on what we're doing, they'll understand why we're doing it," said George Naccara, the Transportation Safety Administration's federal security director for Massachusetts. "Improved security education and outreach, sending the proper message — all of that is important."

Naccara said in a recent interview that he feels Logan Airport, which served as the launching point for the two planes that eventually crashed into the World Trade Center towers, is "unequivocally" safer than 10 years ago.

He attributes that to personnel training and technology, like the eventual adaptation of electronic analysis that would utilize software to pull up a traveler's flight history and criminal record and send that information to the checkpoint to assess the risk.

"That thought has always kept the leadership of the airport focused," he said. "The leaders here have never forgotten what happened here and have vowed to never have that happen again."

The crackdown

- September 2001: Various landmark buildings and monuments were closed to the public or set up with restricted access and metal detectors. The Statue of Liberty, for example, wasn't fully reopened after the attacks until 2009.
- October 2001: About a month after the attacks, Congress passed the Patriot Act with little debate. The law gives authorities the ability to track and intercept communications and get "roving wiretap" court orders. This redefined certain crimes and allows investigators to seize "any tangible things" relevant to a security investigation.
- August 2006: The U.S. Court of Appeals in New York decided that the government could employ "random, suspicionless container searches" in order to safeguard mass transit facilities – like subway systems – from terrorists.
- March 2010: The TSA expanded its full-body scanning program by 10 times, adding 450 machines nationwide starting with Boston's Logan Airport.

the United States military ranks

In the days and months after 9/11, as a stunned and grieving nation struggled to heal itself, patriotism surged. Thousands of American men and women were motivated to join the U.S. armed forces. According to military recruitment numbers, more than 1.6 million people enlisted in the either the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force or National Guard after the 9/11 attacks. The most famous perhaps is Pat Tillman, the NFL star who turned down a $3.6 million contract with the Arizona Cardinals to join the Army. He was killed by friendly fire in Afghanistan.

"I looked at the senior people I was working with and felt that there had to be more than just working in finance." FULOP

Immediately after 9/11, Congress gave the Army the authority to expand its ranks of active-duty soldiers. Army recruiters also stepped up efforts to bring in new troops, such as increased pay. The maximum age of new recruits was also raised from 34 to 42.

Some have died. Others have been maimed.

But Fulop doesn't regret his decision at all.

"This was the greatest learning and growing experience I have had," he told Metro. "Today, I am thankful every day that I am home and safe, and I think nearly every day about soldiers and their families that are still in danger. I don't think I thought about it the same before I served." CARLY BALDWIN

NYC and US still accepting of Muslims

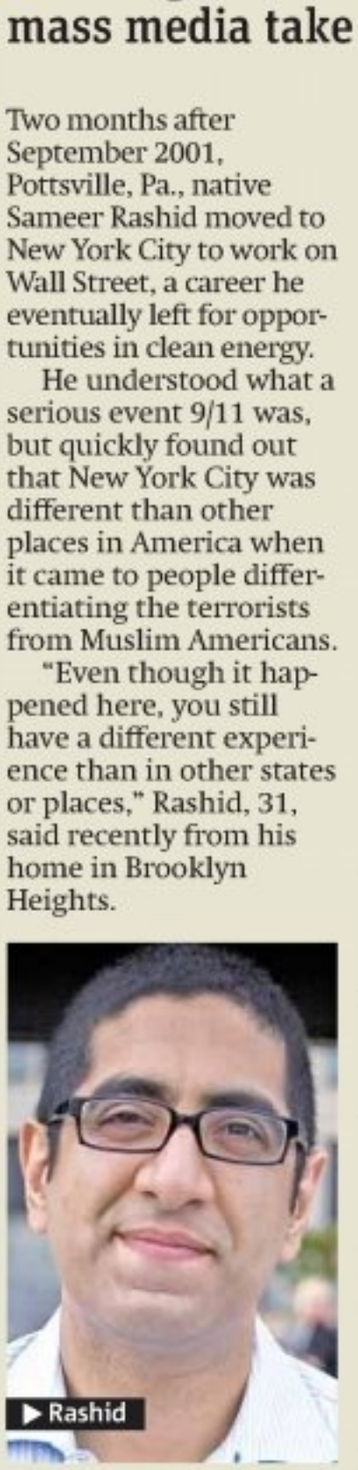
- Young Muslim American says NYC was too diverse post-9/11 to shun anyone for their religion
- Though he has noticed some in mass media take different tones

Two months after September 2001, Pottsville, Pa., native Sameer Rashid moved to New York City to work on Wall Street, a career he eventually left for opportunities in clean energy.

He understood what a serious event 9/11 was, but quickly found out that New York City was different than other places in America when it came to people differentiating the terrorists from Muslim Americans.

"Even though it happened here, you still have a different experience than in other states or places," Rashid, 31, said recently from his home in Brooklyn Heights.



▶ Rashid

But he also remembers watching television and reading newspapers. There was an odd tone toward Muslims for a time after 9/11. "In certain cases for a while, it was alright to say hateful things about Muslims," he said. "It was tolerated for a while and to an extent still is."

Still, for immigrants from places like Pakistan in the 1970s — as is the case with Rashid's mother and father, a doctor in Pottsville ever since — to new immigrants from all over the Muslim world, Rashid said the American dream still motivates the earnest, hard workers.

"A lot of Muslim Americans, more recent immigrants who didn't come here for the same professional reasons: Why are they happy if they're in a situation that the economy is bad?" Rashid poses. "If you compare the life and opportunity you have here, even in the challenging situation, it's better than the country they came from."

ON PAKISTAN:

▶ "Pakistan is very much like America, slightly center right, it's a gun culture, it's got a religious aspect and conservative religious aspect, but also a flavor for freedom and liberty. It's also a military-industrial country, so they have problems related to those issues."

ON ARAB SPRING:

▶ "What's going on in the Muslim world hits close to home. At home or at Friday prayers in New York, specifically, in the last few times, there's been a situation where there is an imam doing a sermon, talking about 'throwing off these tyrants, dictators [and] let's hope their accomplishments are continued or protect the people and God helps them in the next step.'"

Metro talked to a cop and a firefighter who were in New York on Sept. 11, to find out what their lives were like before and after the event. Jim McCaffrey and Glen Klein are one of hundreds of first responders who have the carnage of 9/11 imprinted on their brains — resurfacing in nightmares — and struggle daily to move forward.

POLICE OFFICER: GLEN KLEIN

"I was not a drinker before. I used to get hangovers. But I needed a way to escape the pain that I was feeling." GLEN KLEIN

Ten years after 9/11, the life of a firefighter is in no doubt different, but according to Jim McCaffrey, an active firefighter for the past 26 years, the biggest change in the job comes in the mentality and thought process. McCaffrey was one of thousands of police officers and firefighters who responded to Ground Zero that day.

McCaffrey said the attacks were the first time the concept of terrorism was introduced as a possible threat.

"Terrorism wasn't talked about," he said. "Prior to 9/11 you would train for every eventuality you can think of, but no one ever envisioned planes crashing to the towers."

McCaffrey, who lost his brother-in-law Orio Palmer that day, explained that before the attacks, firefighters trained and prepared for incidents such as a major subway crash or a large scale building collapse.

"Now we try to be more proactive because people are intentionally trying to do damage to the city," he said.

Terrorism forced firefighters to approach any small-scale incident as a potential threat for something bigger.

"The mode of thinking has changed in a way that wasn't prevalent in the past," he said. "Now you always wonder if there's more than meets the eye."

MARY ANN GEORGANTOPOULOS

Before 9/11, Glen Klein worked with the NYPD's "Emergency Services Unit" — "The cops that the cops call when they need help," he says.

But after 9/11, Klein found himself drinking, without a job and a cough that wouldn't quit. Klein, now 53 and living in Long Island, was assigned to a Flushing unit in September 2001. He was supposed to start work at 4 p.m., but saw the Twin Towers on fire on the television and sped into Manhattan.

He and fellow officers arrived downtown just as the first tower collapsed.

"It was just total chaos," he remembers. He saw fellow cops coated in white debris, and "a huge cloud of dust."

He spent days after that — 800 hours total — digging through the rubble, searching for seven rescue worker peers who never surfaced.

Those days haunted him — he started drinking to drown out the memories and retired earlier than he'd planned, after 20 years.

"I wasn't feeling good, both psychologically and physically," he said. "I didn't want to get hurt, and I didn't want to get anyone else hurt."

Before 9/11, in his unit, he said, "We deal with death and destruction on a daily basis ... We deal with the worst of the worst and it never, ever caused me to have to drink before."

He tried to start his own business, but couldn't get out of bed in the morning, drained by nightmares.

Now, Klein is on medication, diagnosed with PTSD, and sleeps better. He can go to dinner and stop after one glass of wine. Like many responders, he has scarring in his lungs and developed asthma. ALISON BOWEN

Escapism

Rise of superheroes and huge comedies

There has been a palpable shift in the entertainment industry post-9/11, and it can be summed up in one word: escapism.

"In the past 10 years, it's become easier to get a good comedy or good action-adventure, Marvel comic-type picture green-lit," says producer Jane Rosenthal, who is behind the "Fockers" franchise.

Producer Peter Tolan has seen a bump in escapist entertainment; but more directly, he has witnessed a "lightening up" of network television. "Even the darkness in my show, 'Rescue Me,' is a little sunnier than it may have been in the past," he says.

Still, both producers are quick to add this is not a reaction solely attributed to the events of Sept. 11, 2001. Technology, Rosenthal says, has made significant changes to the business.

"Ten years ago, there was no iPad. [Now we] make movies that you want to go to to get another kind of experience, one you can't get on whatever device you're using at home."

Rebuilding downtown, one movie at a time

Jane Rosenthal witnessed the 9/11 attacks and wanted to help. As a film producer, her skill set wasn't exactly suited for rescue efforts. But her work in the last 10 years has been instrumental to the revitalization of lower Manhattan.

"'What could we do?'" Rosenthal recalls asking herself and partner Robert DeNiro, who co-founded the film and TV company Tribeca Productions in the neighborhood in 1989. "'OK, we could put on a show and give our community something to smile about and give everyone a reason to go downtown again,'" she says, was their answer.

The resulting Tribeca Film Festival premiered in Nov. 2002 with only 120 days of planning. "We didn't have a sponsor, we didn't have a budget, we didn't have any films," Rosenthal says with a laugh. "So we called the governor, called some of our friends — Ed Burns, Marty Scorsese, Meryl Streep. We weren't going to wait for someone to just come and help us — it was, 'We're going to take care of our community ourselves.'"

"Outside of Sarajevo, we're the only film festival that was started because of an act of war."
JANE ROSENTHAL

That rehabilitation included emotional healing as much as physical rebuilding.

"Outside of Sarajevo, we're the only film festival that was started because of an act of war," Rosenthal says. "Film can go places and say things and activate people in ways that are far more profound than a politician, and that's what we set out to do."

Remembrance

ROBERT ZUCKERMAN / FX

▶ The series finale of "Rescue Me," starring Denis Leary, airs tomorrow at 10 p.m. on FX.

Honoring firefighters by telling their stories

Few pop culture contributions have captured the psyche of New York City post-9/11 quite like "Rescue Me."

Created by Peter Tolan and Denis Leary, who also plays firefighter Tommy Gavin, "Rescue Me" centers on the self-destructive antics of Tommy, who is haunted by his cousin, a FDNY member who died on 9/11.

"[The first responders] don't really deal with [the effects of 9/11] directly because they are still jumping on the rig," says Leary. "Tommy and these guys have been avoiding a lot of it or trying to drink it away or f— it away. That's sort of a common thing for guys who are still at war, you know, on the job."

Though 9/11 was a touchstone for the series, Tolan stresses they were very careful not to lean on the event too heavily. "We never wanted to be accused of diminishing the tragedy into a story point," he says. A sense of humor Leary calls "very organic to living in a firehouse" helped "Rescue Me" achieve that through seven seasons. Humor, Tolan says, "is how people move forward. They laugh and they bust each other's balls, and life goes on."

"'Rescue Me' was a peek inside bravery. It was brave men and what they do, how they behave."
DENIS LEARY

The series, however, has reached its end, pegged to the 10th anniversary of 9/11. Leary says this last season, which has made the anniversary a prominent storyline, is "a natural summing up" for the characters as they are forced to re-examine the events of that day.

But "Rescue Me" has always refused to let their heroics, despite the repercussions, be forgotten.

Healing

The power of music

Paul McCartney sat on the tarmac at JFK Airport when the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center took place. Later, watching the events unfold on TV, he quickly realized his part in helping out — organizing an all-star benefit concert.

"More than words, more than speeches, more than comedy — which are all important — music has some property that can really be very healing," the former Beatle says.

The days following 9/11 are documented in "The Love We Make," a cinema verite film by Albert Maysles chronicling McCartney's experiences around Manhattan, including his preparation for The Concert for New York City. The film premieres Saturday at 9 p.m. on Showtime.

Lauren Manning

Former employee of Cantor Fitzgerald and author of 'Unmeasured Strength'

Lauren Manning almost died on 9/11. But thoughts of her son pulled her through. Here, she records the key moments in her recovery since that day a decade ago.

September 11, 2001

I take a taxi to the World Trade Center, where I work at Cantor Fitzgerald; I'm annoyed to be running late. As I enter the ground-floor lobby of the north tower, I am engulfed by a wall of fire and burned over 82 percent of my body. I run from the building in flames, and the urge to simply close my eyes and surrender to the pain is overwhelming. But a vision of my 10-month-old son helps me find the strength to fight. In my mind, it is clear that I have made a choice: I've decided to live.

The collapse of the towers takes thousands of lives, among them hundreds of my friends and colleagues, but I am fortunate to reach Weill Cornell's William Randolph Hearst Burn Center. I am sedated in a drug-induced coma state for more than six weeks before I next open my eyes, and I battle single-digit odds to survive for almost two months.

▶ November 11, 2001
While I am still unable to walk or even sit up, I'm able to speak again for the first time. I surprise my husband, Greg, by whispering 'hello' as he walks into my hospital room.

▶ December 12, 2001
I arrive at Burke Rehabilitation Hospital where I began an even more intensive schedule of the rigorous physical and occupational therapy that I began to receive at Weill Cornell. When I see my face in the mirror for the first time, my eyes are the same but my face has the look of a defeated boxer, and I turn to Greg and say, "I wish my tears could wash away my scars."

▶ March 11, 2002
Tyler, who was just 10 months old when I was injured, has been a frequent visitor at Burke; he's masteed walking down its seemingly endless hallways. Greg, who has been sending notes to friends and family from my bedside, each one signed "Love, Greg & Lauren," publishes his collected e-mails in what will become a best-selling book. As this first part of my story becomes known, countless thousands of strangers send letters of encouragement.

▶ March 15, 2002
Six months and four days after leaving for work, I return home to stand once again on the cobblestones of Perry Street. I walk arm in arm with Greg back into our apartment, as my son, the beacon of hope who guided me home, takes his afternoon nap. We share a slice of the birthday cake that has been kept in the freezer since I missed the party for his first birthday.

TIMOTHY LEE

▶ Laura Manning stands tall today.

▶ September 11, 2002
The weather is once again brilliantly clear, but high winds have caused debris to fall from the AOL Time Warner tower (then under construction). With Greg's help, I needed to walk many blocks to catch a taxi to arrive in time to speak during the ceremony. I was in the early stages of healing, and every step brought fatigue and pain. I tell the families I wish to remember their lost loved ones as they lived, not as they died, and for a few moments the feelings for so many no longer with us takes a form other than tears.

▶ Fall 2002
I am the keynote speaker for the convention of the New York State Occupational Therapy Association. I am named one of Glamour Magazine's Women of the Year for 2002, and I am given the award by Hillary Clinton. I first met Clinton while at Burke, where her warmth and her willingness to listen immediately put me at ease. I receive an Anti-Defamation League "Without Fear" award.

▶ June 2004
I am a torchbearer as the Olympic Flame is carried through Manhattan. I jog three blocks with it, as Tyler calls out, "Mom, you're an excellent runner."

▶ Summer 2004
I ride a bicycle again, and Greg and I attend the third annual Cantor Fitzgerald Relief Fund White Party in honor of Gary Lutnick, the younger brother of Howard Lutnick, the CEO of Cantor Fitzgerald, and Edie Lutnick, who became the director of the Cantor Fitzgerald Relief Fund.

▶ Spring 2007
After many years living downtown, we move uptown. Tyler enters the first grade. After years of grinding surgeries, I am finally feeling stronger but still face therapy. We have been trying to have a child since 2004.

▶ August 25, 2009
Away on a family vacation in Rome, we are finally able to tell Tyler that he will be having a baby brother.

▶ October 22, 2009
Our second son, Jagger, is born with the help of a wonderful woman who serves as our gestational surrogate. His arrival returns us to a world of innocence and trust that was taken when Tyler was just 10 months old.

▶ June 19, 2010
For Father's Day, Tyler, Greg and I return to the Central Park Zoo, this time bringing Jagger for his first visit. The miracle as I stand with Tyler is that 10 months have become 10 years and I am still by his side. I marvel at the ability within all of us to survive and to heal.

Milestones I remember

▶ November 17, 2001
Returning to Tyler has been my overriding goal. At last we are reunited, and he recognizes me as his mother and does not turn away. I sing him a song with my newly regained voice, and I tell Greg the reunion was everything I fought to live for.

▶ March 30, 2002
Our friend Debra, with whom we shared a house during August 2001, holds a welcome home party for me, where I am at last able to laugh again with the friends who have shown me such great support.

▶ May 13, 2002
For Mother's Day we take Tyler to the Central Park Children's Zoo. I am nervous that the sun and the crowds may be too much; but that afternoon I learn to move beyond such fears, replenished by my son's curiosity and innocent joy.

▶ Fall 2002
Buoyed by so many messages of hope and love, I continue to meet small physical milestones amidst continued surgery. I am now able to go for short walks and play with Tyler a little more freely. Greg begins working at Cantor Fitzgerald to assist in the firm's rebuilding.

▶ Summer 2005
I help Tyler learn to ride a bicycle, just as I had to re-learn to ride the year before. Greg and I begin to seriously contemplate having another child. I volunteer to help the Cantor Fitzgerald Relief Funds White Party as a co-chair to help raise money. Greg's band plays at the events; we do this for four years.

▶ Present
I realized every day I had a choice, and that my choice was very clear: I had to do whatever it took to get to out of the hospital and home to my family. We all wake up every day with the choice of how we're going to live our lives and face our challenges.

Kris and Kim had a better start to their Labor Day than you did

Newlyweds Kim Kardashian and Kris Humphries kicked off their Labor Day weekend in style at a huge soiree hosted by media guru Jason Binn and party planner extraordinaire Colin Cowie. Titled "A Night of Style & Glamour," celebs like Tinsley Mortimer, Lance Bass, Kyle MacLachlan, La La Anthony, Greta van Susteren and Sonja Morgan gathered at the huge, gilded party space Capitale to celebrate on Wednesday night. "Everything she does is big and over the top. So who better than the two of us to get together and roll out a party welcoming her to New York?" Cowie told reporters while working the red carpet. "With that in mind, we bring great entertainment, beautiful people, fabulous cocktails, extraordinary food and a lot of surprises." Here's how East Coasters who weren't invited (or couldn't attend) the California wedding celebrated the couple:

Talking points

Madonna is no Coppola

Madonna brought her directorial debut, "W.E.," to the Venice International Film Festival last week, but the critical drubbing her work received was hardly welcoming. The film, about American socialite Wallace Simpson and starring Abbie Cornish, was dubbed "an extraordinarily silly, preening, fatally mishandled film" by the Guardian. Variety declared that, "burdened with risible dialogue and weak performances, the pic doesn't have much going for it." The singer and first-time director will next head to the Toronto International Film Festival next week.

Murphy to host the Oscars?

Eddie Murphy may have a new gig as the host of next year's Oscars, according to Deadline. The "Shrek" star is reportedly at the top of the list for director Brett Ratner, who is producing the awards show, and Murphy is said to be "showing interest," sources say. Murphy nearly secured Oscar gold himself for his role in "Dreamgirls," but many believe his poorly received comedy "Norbit," released during Academy voting, dashed his chances.

Lopez cries on set of 'Idol'

Tensions are high at "American Idol" as Jennifer Lopez and Steven Tyler prepare for their second season as judges. "Me and Randy [Jackson] and Steve got into our first fight. I got really, really upset," Lopez tells Ryan Seacrest during a radio interview. The row was apparently over the audition of a female singer whom Lopez found impressive but Tyler and Jackson wanted to dismiss. "She was amazing," Lopez says. "I thought I was being Punk'd. How can we let this girl go? I was upset."

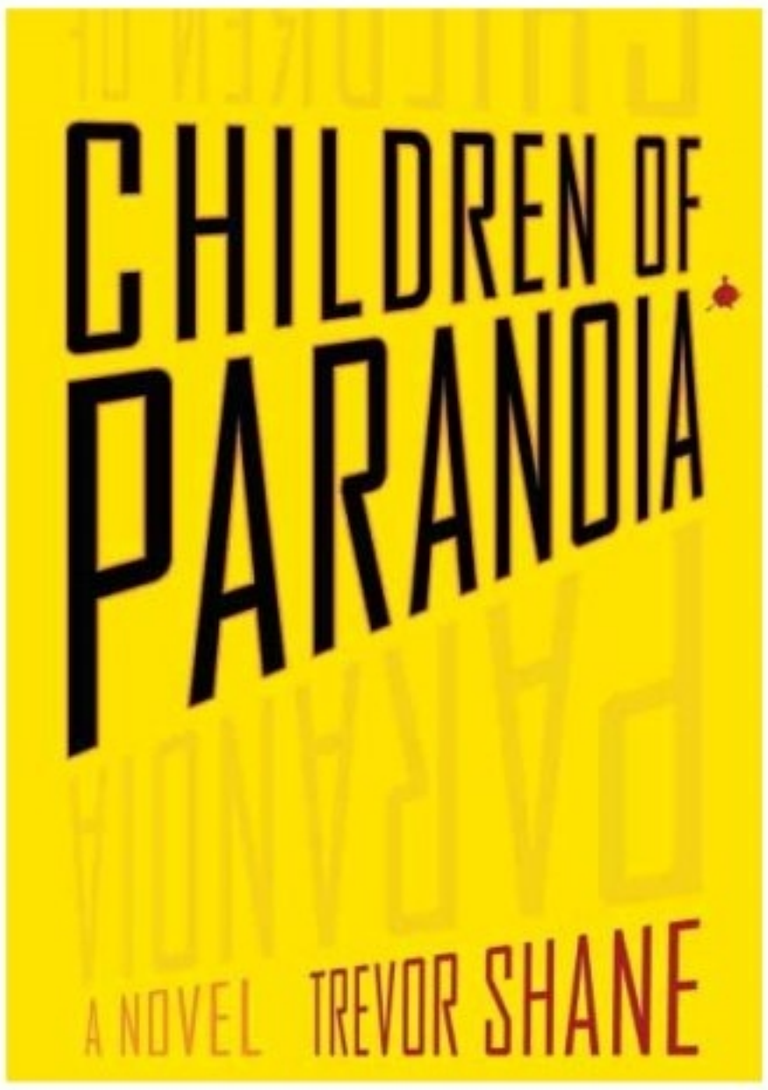
Children of war become 'Children of Paranoia'

- Imagine being born into a shady, underground war where anyone you meet may be your mortal enemy
- This is the world of Trevor Shane's debut thriller

KEVIN TRACESER

Shane



Joseph, the lead character in Trevor Shane's debut novel, "Children of Paranoia," is a soldier in a deadly, secret war — a bloody game of tag that's been going on for centuries — in which two sides must kill one another or else be killed themselves. The only guidance they have? "The Rules" (see sidebar). Shane talked to Metro about developing a dystopian premise but how, in the end, he just wants to make your pulse "quicken."

How did the idea of "Children of Paranoia" come about?

The first chapter, where Joseph follows a woman home at night and kills her, jumped into my head. The idea of a secret war going on in the shadows of everyday society arose out of an attempt to make this character who had just committed a horrible act sympathetic, maybe even heroic, without resorting to a oversimplified version of good versus evil.

When in the writing process did "The Rules" come about?

Rules of war always seem somewhat counterintuitive but, when you think about them, they make perfect sense. Once someone has been ordered to break the most basic tenet of modern society — do not kill — they have to be given new rules so that they can maintain some sort of moral center. Once someone is ordered to kill one person, to violate this basic tenet, what's to stop them from killing another? Or from doing anything else for that matter?

The added factor in "Children of Paranoia" is that no secret war could exist for hundreds of years if it frequently leaked into regular society. Hence, rule No. 1: No killing innocent bystanders.

How do you find the creative process to be when you're writing action?

I try to put readers directly into the action by writing the way a person trapped in the middle of the action would think. There's no place for long sentences when you're writing action. There's no place for rumination. If Hamlet were a solider in the "Children of Paranoia" world, he would have been killed in the first act. I want the reader to forget that they are reading and to feel like they are part of the action. I want them to feel their pulse quicken and their skin tingle.

dorothy.robinson@metro.us

The rules

These are the two rules each side in the war must follow, or else become the target:

- No killing of innocent bystanders.
- No killing anyone under the age of 18.

How the Grateful Dead became unlikely business consultants

When he realized his favorite band was also an extremely well-oiled moneymaking machine, Barry Barnes paid closer attention The author on 'Everything I Know About Business I Learned from the Grateful Dead'

▶ The Grateful Dead, circa 1970. They'd play live regularly until Jerry Garcia's death in 1995.

In his youth, Barry Barnes was pretty square, especially by late '60s standards: He was a business major working in IT for IBM. But then in 1972, he heard the Grateful Dead for the first time. "Was it a shift in consciousness? Yeah, I guess you could say that," he explains.

He spent the next 17 years attempting to keep his patchouli-scented tie-dyes in the closet as he pursued an MBA and later worked as an executive at John Deere — until 1989, when inspiration struck: What could the Grateful Dead teach the business world?

"I could see the dramatic changes in the economy, and I saw businesses struggling to adapt," he explains. "The music was speaking to me in a nonverbal language, saying: 'Look, you talk about adaptability? Here it is. Teamwork? Creativity? Innovation? Reaching out to your customers? These guys know how to do this better than anybody.'"

He promptly quit his job and began a doctoral program at the University of Kansas, where he hoped to study the "organizational principles of the Grateful Dead."

Barnes' research came to international prominence after being featured heavily in a 2010 Atlantic Magazine article on the Dead. Now, after 20 years of study, "Everything I Know About Business I Learned from the Grateful Dead: The Ten Most Innovative Lessons from a Long, Strange Trip," is set to hit bookstores in November.

"The people that I interviewed in the Grateful Dead organization were on the business side. They weren't in the band. For the band, it's easy to say [they didn't plan anything]," says Barnes. "But you can't have a successful organization that tours the country nonstop for 30 years without a whole lot of planning going on."

Don't regret accepting an offer

Are you currently at a job that you dislike? A new report by AOL Jobs says that you're not alone — more than 50 percent of people regret having taken their job. Here are three ways to choose the right job from the start.

1. Think hard about the career you want to establish.
Each job is supposed to support your overall career path. You need to become more self-aware and figure out what your true strengths are and what makes you different from everyone else. Ask your friends, family and previous employers for feedback on career choices, as well.

2. Research companies that can help you build your career.
Start by going on sites like Glassdoor.com and Hoovers.com or reviewing Fortune Magazine's "100 Best Companies to Work For" list. This will give you a good idea of what companies are out there and what they offer employees in terms of work environment, benefits and salaries. Then, once you've narrowed your list to around five companies, jump on social networks and start engaging with employees who have positions that interest you.

3. Know the corporate environment.
A job interview is not just for the employer! You should be critical of the type of companies you're applying to and feel like you fit into the corporate culture.

▶ Students on a budget should still hit the bookstore first.

Rental, used textbooks cheaper than digital

According to an analysis by CampusBooks.com, e-books are rarely the cheapest option Rental texts still the best bargain for students

While digital textbooks are typically more affordable than new paper books, one study suggests that price alone might not be enough to sway customers toward digital when rental and used books are on the market.

The analysis, which was conducted by textbook price comparison site CampusBooks.com, compared prices for 1,000 textbook titles across the site's partnerships with 12 textbook rental companies, 35 used-book retailers and seven digital textbook creators. It found that for about 81 percent of these books, renting a paper version was the cheapest available option. The price of used paper books beat out rental fees about 11 percent of the time, and e-books — which, like rentals, are usually sold for use during a 130- or 180-day period — had the most affordable price in about 8 percent of cases.

Quoted

"Until the number of students choosing digital books starts to eat into the availability of used books, it's unlikely that e-books will be the cheapest option the majority of the time."

While the saved costs of physical manufacturing and shipping make price an advertised selling point for many e-textbook retailers, a student who is making purchasing decisions based solely on cost will likely find a better deal elsewhere.

CampusBooks.com CEO Jeff Cohen says that prices across all book formats shift frequently and that e-textbooks tend to become the cheapest option for a given title when used books are harder to find.

"There's definitely not a clear winner of who is cheapest all the time," Cohen says.

New book examines the history of white male fraternities and how some maintain the status quo

"The Company He Keeps" is one of the first attempts to chronicle the history of one of the most complex cliques in American life: the predominantly white, Protestant male fraternity.

In slightly more than 400 pages, University of Northern Colorado professor Nicholas L. Syrett traces the evolution of these clubs and their role in preserving wealth and connections, as well as the way these groups have influenced our definition of masculinity in America.

"There have been a couple of very good books on [fraternities] in the last 15 years, but they haven't been historical. I was a little surprised when I decided to do this that someone had not written a history of these organizations from a professional and historical standpoint," explains Syrett.

But it is the later pages of "Company" that are most compelling for contemporary readers, as Syrett diagnoses a disturbing trend that arose somewhere around 1970 in these Greek clubs. As white male preeminence was challenged by the emergence of various social movements, Syrett found that the culture of fraternities moved toward degrading women in the pursuit of maintaining their own perception of masculinity.

"Reading newspaper accounts that describe a group of men doing pretty atrocious things to women, I think we have become accustomed to the idea that it just kind of happens," says Syrett. "My basic question is: Why would men want to do something like that? What is the history of organizations that seem to lead to an expectance of behavior like this? Where does it come from, and why?" ● BRUCE WALSH

History lesson: US prosperity

RE: "FACT OR FICTION? FED AS SAVIOR": In response to Kelly Donnoe's statement that "The New Deal, WWII and the Federal Reserve made the depression worse": This is another example of trying to rewrite history to justify your opinions. You are entitled to your opinion; but to make a valid argument, supplement your opinion with facts. Fact: In 1933 (when New Deal policy was starting to be enacted) the unemployment rate in the U.S. was 24.9 percent. In 1936, unemployment was 16.9 percent. In 1942 the rate was 4.7 percent. Hmm ...
MEGAN TOWEY, VIA E-MAIL

In the 1700s we were agrarian, close to the land and more self-sufficient. What separated us from that was not the New Deal, but the growth of the industrial revolution in the 1800s with a series of booms, busts, panics, monopolies, stock swindles, etc. The New Deal minimized starvation and brought much-needed regulation and insurance and the greatest period of economic stability, prosperity and middle class growth in history.
HARRY THORN, PHILADELPHIA

Will we take care of rivals?

All right smart libertarians, let's say we drop FEMA and let the states deal with their own natural disasters. How many Republican governors will come to the help of Democratic states and vice and versa? Which Republican would help socialist Vermont; which Democrat would help the land of Michele Bachmann?
SUZY SANDOR, VIA E-MAIL

Corrupting influences

Economics 101: Wealth is created by human work and nature's resources in tandem. Bankers usurp it by control — stealing it through usury and loaning it to themselves via shadow companies. Then they bribe the legislature to steal the very process of its creation. For the people, it is all downhill from there. A new paradigm is needed. CHARLES MICHAEL COUCH, VIA E-MAIL

The religion of our denial

The silence of our alleged religious leaders is deafening in reaction to the ban of clergy at the upcoming 9/11 ceremony and the ban of the word "God" at military cemeteries! Will Christians and Jews turn the other cheek until they just fall over and die?

♍ Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22. This is a day where your nobler qualities are so greatly enhanced that you'll be able to utilize them in ways that will increase your possibilities for achieving popularity and your goals.

♎ Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23. Lucky you! You should be able to get something concrete done; not necessarily from anything you'll initiate, but through situations originated by others. Those close to you may be your biggest benefactors.

♏ Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 22. Anything that is grand in scope can prove to be exceptionally fortunate for you. This could be anything from landing a big sale to meeting a new person.

♐ Sagittarius Nov. 23-Dec. 21. Dame Fortune is about to look upon you and your efforts extremely favorably. You could be about to finally get that big break at work.

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19. Your peers are likely to cast you in a leadership role, whether you are seeking it or not. Accept the assignment, because it will prove to be rewarding for both you and them.

♒ Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 19. Be on the alert, because multiple new ways to enhance and supplement your income will cross your path.

♓ Pisces Feb. 20-March 20. Events might prove that you have more friends than you realize who will do for you whatever you need of them. Don't hesitate to seek that big favor you desire.

♈ Aries March 21-April 19. That break you've been hoping would come your way regarding your work is about to happen. Make the most of all the opportunities that occur along with it.

♉ Taurus April 20-May 20. Don't turn down a social invitation you're likely to get, even if it is just going out to lunch with someone. Much more can come of the friendship than is shown now.

♊ Gemini May 21-June 20. It isn't necessary to fret over a slow start, because staying power is what will count in the end. Concentrate on having a positive attitude.

♋ Cancer June 21-July 22. You'll not only know how to employ the clever ideas of others, but you'll be an imaginative thinker yourself and know how to use your own thoughts exceptionally well.

♌ Leo July 23-Aug. 22. Because your material aspects look so exceptionally good, there are strong possibilities that you might be able to utilize creative financial thinking in multiple ways. BERNICE BEDE OSOL

Please apply a large grain of salt to what follows. Remember, I predicted last year that Kevin Kolb would make us all forget Donovan McNabb. Who knew he would also make us all forget Kevin Kolb?

But now that the joy of the front-office assault on free agency is over and coach Andy Reid is back prowling the sidelines, reality is setting in. These Eagles have the same problems they have had in Reid's 13-year run.

▶ The Eagles will finish with nine wins. What? The Dream Team barely finishing above .500? Say it ain't so, Joe Banner. The moment of truth for me came in the third preseason game, when Andy Reid challenged a touchdown play that was already being reviewed. He never learns — and never will.

That's why these Eagles have a glut of amazing cornerbacks and not one standout linebacker, why offensive lineman Todd Herremans is moving from guard to tackle, why Reid keeps telling us he's got to do a better job while changing nothing.

Analyzing the new season starts with Michael Vick, the newly minted $100-million quarterback. And the only thing that really counts is the answer to this question: Will Vick stay healthy the entire season? Not a chance. Not with that offensive line. And without Vick for some key games, the Birds will be exposed. An unbalanced roster and a stubborn coach do not equal a championship.

Quoted

Will Vick stay healthy the entire season? Not a chance.

If the Eagles fail again with this team — and this payroll — will it finally mark the end of Reid's tenure? If you can't wait for my next column of bold predictions, I'll offer it now. No.

▶ The Phillies will fall short with the best team in their history. Boston is simply a better team — challenged more rigorously in the regular season and deeper in the bullpen and on the bench. The Phillies have three excellent starters, but how well will they shut down that ominous Red Sox lineup? Not well enough.

As our hopes fade, so will our blind affection for bumbling manager Charlie Manuel. Will anybody still see him as a folk hero after winning one title in seven seasons with the best roster in team history? Let's hope not.

▶ The Flyers will win the Stanley Cup. Just when all hope is gone with our two best bets, the Flyers will swoop in and end their 36-year Cup drought behind a hungry team, a brilliant coach and an unflappable captain.

Now clip out this column and place it on your refrigerator. If nothing else, it'll be good for a few laughs in the crazy months ahead.

Time for Phils fans to get nervous

GETTY IMAGES

▶ Herndon

In the eighth inning of a game in Florida, Charlie Manuel replaced Antonio Bastardo with David Herndon. If you're looking for a reason to get nervous, you should start with that one laughable decision.

Yes, I know. Bastardo was pitching for the third straight game, and he had walked the only two batters he faced. Replacing him isn't the problem. Replacing him with Manuel's pet bullpen project is. Lefty batters have a .357 average against Herndon. He should not be on the roster of a great team. Enough said.

Of course, the Marlins came back from a 4-3 deficit with three home runs. The next day, Herndon coughed up another when he had to throw 69 pitches over nearly four innings because the manager ran out of pitchers.

Charlie Manuel has a terrific array of talent; no one can argue that point. But will he choose Roy Oswalt over rookie phenom Vance Worley for the No. 4 spot in the playoff rotation? Will Ben Francisco or Kyle Kendrick or — gasp — Herndon get pushed into the spotlight just because they were here all year? Will Brad Lidge get the ball in a big moment just to thank him for 2008?

The manager's loyalty to players is often cited as one of the biggest reasons for his success. If he pushes it too far this fall, it will also be one of the biggest reasons for his failure.

RICARD LARNA/METRO

▶ Vick doesn't feel that any defense can stop him.

Is Vick reverting to his old ways?

Am I the only one who got squeamish when Michael Vick popped off about how no team could design a defense to stop him? Was I the first fan to wonder if that new contract was already changing him back into the egotistical, obnoxious jerk he was before prison humbled him?

All I could think about after his comment was that disastrous, snow-delayed game, when the Vikings sacked him six times, forced him to fumble twice and intercepted him once. The Vikings were playing for nothing, on the road, against a team desperate for a win. The design of that defense stopped him with relative ease, didn't it?

In fact, during his mediocre second half, Vick proved that he was hardly unstoppable — especially once opponents began to adjust to his new style. The quarterback's final, underthrown pass to Riley Cooper ended a thrilling comeback against the Packers — and with it, another season. Have all of the zeroes on Vick's new deal obliterated that memory?

The Eagles made a mistake when they gave Vick all of that money based on half a schedule of elite play and exemplary behavior. There was nothing to lose by waiting until he proved his value in a full season filled with the highest of hopes.

Idle thoughts from Cataldi ...

1 Watching the Phils under protest. Is it OK for me to file a protest, too, after that debacle in Florida on Sunday? No, not for the disputed double. I'd like to protest the fact that the Phillies ran out of pitchers even though it's September and they have an expanded roster. How could that happen?

2 Hope springs eternal once again. The single greatest moment of every sports year happens again at 1 p.m. next Sunday, when the Eagles and St. Louis Rams line up for the opening kickoff of another NFL season — a world of possibility stretched across 100 yards on a football field.

3 Liar, liar. Phillies president Dave Montgomery said over the weekend that his team's rivalry with the Eagles is "way, way overblown." Eagles president Joe Banner has repeatedly said the same thing. OK, then. I'm sure neither president would mind submitting to a lie detector test, right?

Phillies activate Blanton, Lee dominates Atlanta

Team activates right-hander from DL Also welcomes Kendrick back
Lee throws complete-game shutout for 16th win Pence fuels offense

After three-plus months, Joe Blanton is back.

The Phillies activated the right-hander yesterday from the 60-day disabled list. Blanton, who is 1-2 with a 5.50 ERA in six starts this season, had been on the DL since May 23 with elbow inflammation.

Blanton made one rehab appearance in Single-A Lakewood last week. The team also reinstated Kyle Kendrick, who had been on paternity leave. METRO

Phils 9, Braves 0

Lee being Lee
Cliff Lee (16-7) threw a complete-game shutout, holding the Braves to no runs on five hits. He's given up just two earned runs in 48 2/3 innings since Aug. 4.

Pence shines
Hunter Pence accounted for three RBIs, with a two-run single in the first and a double in the fifth. Ryan Howard also homered.

Eagles sign DeVan for O-line depth

Former Colt adds much-needed insurance • Played under Mudd for a year • Practices with scout team

Danny Watkins is the Eagles' starting right guard.

The team has the utmost confidence in its No. 1 draft pick.

However, it always helps to have insurance. So the Eagles signed veteran Kyle DeVan — one day after he was cut by Indianapolis.

"I had to move on, I had to find another job," DeVan said. "And I'm just happy to be here, happy to have a job, happy to be part of a great organization in a city that's historically known for great fans and great football."

DeVan took reps with the scout team yesterday at practice. He said the techniques and calls are similar to what they ran in Indianapolis, where Howard Mudd coached the offensive line from 1998-2009.

"I'm just trying to learn the plays; like I said, the cadence is completely different than [Colts QB] Peyton's [Manning]," DeVan said. "So you know whatever I have to do to get better is what I'm going to do."

The 26-year-old started 21 regular-season games for the Colts from 2009-10. He was the team's starting right guard in Super Bowl XLIV and spent one year in Mudd's system.

Start making your way back up to Dublin by going northeast to Kilkenny — which, like Waterford, is one of the classic stops on a southeast tour of Ireland. The enormous 900-year-old Kilkenny Castle has rooms and rooms loaded with historical furniture and tapestries along with a charming Victorian tea room. But if the castle's not your thing, there's also the charming Kilkenny City itself, which offers tons of great shops, friendly locals and little avenues to stroll down.

Dublin is and always should be your first stop on this tour of Southeast Ireland. The downtown area is relatively small and easy to explore on foot. Any tourist worth his salt will head for Trinity College in order to see the Book of Kells (an elaborately illustrated Latin text of the four Gospels of the Christian bible, created around 800 A.D. by Irish monks), along with St. Patrick's Cathedral and the Dublin Writer's Museum. The more discerning visitor would make his way to the Shelbourne Hotel on what is considered Ireland's most famous park, St. Stephen's Green. The Number 27 Bar and Horseshoe Bar at the Shelbourne are attractive hot spots for celebrity spotting and artisan cocktails. But more importantly, don't forget to stop into a pub for a pint of Guinness.
